What's Really Keeping Employees Happy Around the World?

According to Gallup's Global Leadership Report, the answer is clear: hope.

At the Leadership Institute, we believe leadership is more than managing projects or pursuing business goals—it's about creating belief in what's possible. Our latest blog explores why hope matters and how leaders at every level can build it into their daily approach.

Read more to learn three practical ways to lead with hope—and why it might be your most powerful leadership tool yet.

SUCCESS SHORTCUT

Checkout these strategies on navigating work relationships.

3 PROS TO HAVING NEIGHBORING RELATIONSHIPS AT WORK

REMAIN OBJECTIVE

Keeping a certain level of distance between you and coworkers can help remove bias and personal interest from workplace decisions.

Avoiding personal bias can lead to fair and rational decision making.

ENHANCED WORK/LIFE BALANCE

By compartmentalizing your professional and personal spheres, you can recharge and rejuvenate outside of work.

Maintain boundaries between work and personal.

DECREASED CONFLICT

Work relationships that are treated like family can lead to drama and gossip.

Keeping workplace relationships professional can minimize the likelihood of personal interactions impacting your job performance.
